"The Message of Water" by Dr. Masaru Emoto, Japanese researcher (1934-2014).

Masaru Emoto discovered the vibrational patterns inherent in all matter at the atomic level and published more than 10 titles on this subject in Japan. He treated more than 10,000 clients with a special device and water, helping people heal from various problems on spiritual and physical levels. He recognized that water can store information and developed water crystal photography to prove his theory. Water crystal photography shows that water responds to every piece of information (vibration) by changing its design. Through his groundbreaking research and discoveries, which were published in his books "Messages from Water" and "The Hidden Messages of Water," he gained worldwide recognition. He went out into the world to show people the significance of human consciousness in relation to the previously unknown knowledge about water and the principle of "Hado" ("Hado" = the vibrational pattern inherent in all matter at the atomic level). In Hamburg, Bad Wörishofen, and Munich (2001), Masaru Emoto gave lectures on his findings. After the science magazine "raum&zeit" (No. 107) presented his book, it received the largest response to an article up to that point.

Emoto showed that the actual quality of water reveals itself in its ice crystals, whereas conventional laboratory analyses remain blind to this evidence. By photographing the deliberately created crystal formations, he provided clear and comprehensible proof of his theories that anyone could understand. These photos and, above all, the demonstration of the changeable water crystals, made him famous. The forms could be impressively altered solely through positive or negative commands, with positive words sometimes producing beautifully formed crystals that could be destroyed into misshapen structures by negative words.
